Based on EPA sampling data at Hogback, N.M, San Juan River water quality has returned to pre-event conditions. The City of Durango has resumed taking water from the Animas River for use in their drinking water system, the State of New Mexico has lifted restrictions on the use of the San Juan River for drinking water, and the State of Utah has lifted restrictions for using San Juan River water for irrigation and livestock watering. EPA and its federal partners continue to evaluate the need for resources and to engage the Navajo Nation.
